NOTES TO THE READER.

I. The Astronomical calculations in this work are made to true clock time The effects of Refraction, according to the latest improved Tables of Bessel, and the Equation of Time, have both been applied to the times of the Sun's rising and setting; so that the Almanac, and a good clock, will agree the year round.

II. A Time-piece may be set very nearly true by the rising, setting, or southing of the Sun, Moon, or Stars,—but more accurately by the Sun (or the southing of the Sun, or a fixed Star), any where on or near the 40th degree of north latitude.

III. The time of the rising, setting, or southing of a fixed Star may be carried several days forward by subtracting, or backward by adding 4 minutes per day.

IV. The common day of 24 hours begins at midnight, and morning (marked morn) continues from midnight till noon; and afternoon (marked aft.) continues from noon till midnight; this should be remembered carefully when looking for the times of the rising, setting, or southing of the Moon or Stars soon after midnight.

ECLIPSES.

In the year 1881 there will be two Eclipses of the Sun and two of of the Moon, and a transit of Mercury over the Sun's disc.

I. A partial Eclipse of the Sun on the 27th of Fifth Month. This Eclipse begins at sunset on a line drawn from Buffalo, N. Y., southwest through Wheeling, W. Va., Frankford, Ky., to Little Rock, Ark.; east of this line the Eclipse will not be visible. It will not be visible south of a line drawn from Little Rock, Ark., northwest through Salt Lake City to Portland, Oregon. To all places west and north of these lines the beginning of the Eclipse will be visible just before sunset. The ending occurs after sunset.

II. A total Eclipse of the Moon on the 11th and 12th of Sixth Month, visible as follows:

III. An annular Eclipse of the Sun on the 21st of Eleventh Month, invisible in the United States; visible around the South Pole.

IV. A partial Eclipse of the Moon on the 5th of Twelfth Month, occurring in the middle of the day, consequently invisible here.

A transit of Mercury across the Sun's disc on the 7th of Eleventh Month, occurring just before sunset in the eastern parts of the United States, consequently invisible.

David Sands.

During the revolutionary war, a detachment of the American army, comprising about five hundred men, was stationed near the dwelling of David Sands, a few miles above the city of New York. A secret uneasiness pressed upon David's mind, and his wife felt a presentiment that some trial was approaching them. One night, after they had retired to bed, she was alarmed by a noise about the house, which her husband thought might be the rustling of the wind among the neighboring trees. In a few minutes, however, they heard some one near the room say, "Some of the family are awake—we will shoot them!" Their sleeping room being on the first floor, David and his wife easily escaped by the window; but in passing through it they were discovered, and a pistol was discharged at them, the ball of which grazed David's forehead. Having on but a scanty supply of clothing, and the night being cold, they suffered severely before morning. After the day dawned, they returned to their dwelling, which they found plundered of all the cash, about fifty pounds, most of their bedding, and even some of the furniture. A domestic and two children, who were sleeping in a different part of the house, were not disturbed.

David soon felt that it would be right for him to go to the encampment. On his arrival, he found several officers conversing together, who thus accosted him: "Mr. Sands, we have heard of the depredation committed at your house, and desire to know what you think can be done to discover the offenders." David, after a time of solid consideration, informed them that he believed, if the men were drawn up in rank and file of fifty in a company, he should be able, by following divine direction, to detect those concerned in the robbery. The officers wondered at this, thinking it impossible that with no outward knowledge of their persons he should be able to point them out. Nevertheless, they ordered out the troops, and David commenced his review. As he passed down the first rank, he made a short pause near the bottom, and then went on to the next company. Here he soon paused before one of the men, and looking him in the face, said, "Where wast thou last night?" He replied, "Keeping guard, sir; and a very cold night it was." "Didst thou find it so when at my house?" asked David. At this the man trembled so much, and discovered such evident marks of guilt, that he was immediately ordered out of the ranks, and placed under arrest. In like manner four others of the men were discovered. David then went to a young officer, and asked him how he came to aid and accompany his men to pillage his house? He denied the charge. David placed his hand on the officer's breast, saying, "Let me feel thy heart, and see if that do not accuse thee;" and finding the heart throbbing so that it could be felt even up to the neck, he called the other officers to draw near, and see for themselves how his own heart had become his accuser.

There had been eight concerned in the robbery, two of whom belonged to the company near the foot of which David first stopped, and should have been at that very spot; but they had deserted before the search commenced. The greater part of his furniture, and about one half of the money, was returned; the rest was reported as lost. The offenders were brought to trial before a civil tribunal, where David not appearing against them they were discharged; but the officers informed him that by martial law they had forfeited their lives. They were brought bound to his house, and he was told that he should determine their sentence. Upon this, he administered suitable advice to them, forgave them the injury they had done to him, and perceiving them to be weary, ordered suitable refreshment. Whilst thus returning good for evil, David's wife said to one of the men, "Thou art he that shot at us." Her husband added, "he has been told of that before." The staff officers seemed to think that the young officer at least must suffer death, because he should have been an example to the men; but on David's earnest entreaty, they suffered him to desert. The men received some corporal punishment to deter others from similar practices.

Several years after this occurrence, David Sands being from home on a religious visit, a man came up to him, begging his pardon, and would have gone down on his knees if he had not been prevented. He confessed himself to have been one of the two above alluded to, who had deserted to avoid detection. He declared that he had never been easy in his mind since, and expressed a hope that David would forgive him. David Sands replied, that it was out of his power to forgive sins, but he hoped the Almighty would forgive him, as he himself had long since forgiven all those concerned in the robbery. The other individual of the two then came up. He also acknowledged that he had not had true peace since he committed the crime. He then desired that David, in token of forgiveness, would go with him, and partake of the hospitalities of his house; which he did, and doubtless had much more satisfaction than if, pursuing him at law, he had avenged the injury received by punishing the offender.—Selected.

Lecture on the Early History of the Society of Friends, in Bristol and Somersetshire.

The magistrates certainly manifested a commendable zeal for the preservation of the peace of the city; but one of them in particular, Alderman Hellier, showed great sympathy with the rioters: and in reporting these tumults to the Protector, they represented these innocent men against whom they were raised as the cause of them. They also issued a warrant for the apprehension of the strangers, including in the number George Fox and James Naylor, neither of whom had then been in Bristol. The absurd plea on which the warrant was issued, was that of their being monks of the Franciscan order from Rome, travelling under the guise of Quakers. The opposition offered to these strangers was subsequently turned against those who had embraced their doctrines, and they had to undergo a severe ordeal of persecution, which was, however, but an earnest of greater suffering in store for them. At one of the Quarter Sessions, before which a number of Friends had to appear, the Town Clerk in charging the Jury told them the law did protect those who met together to sing, pray, read, or expound the Scriptures; but for people to meet together, though in a private house, and to be silent, was no part of religion, and therefore out of the verge of the law. The Friends had no difficulty in making it appear that this doctrine was as contrary to law as it was to sound sense; and they further showed that the statement on which it was based was incorrect, as it was well known that they did not meet together "resolving silence," and that there was both prayer and preaching in their meetings. Marsden, in his Dictionary of Christian Sects, says, that the only excuse which can be pleaded for the severity used towards Friends, was furnished by the excesses into which some of those connected with them were led. And after making large allowance for the misrepresentations of adversaries, and even confining ourselves to Friends' own statements, it is evident that a good deal of unhealthy excitement prevailed. It could hardly indeed have been otherwise than that, in an age of universal excess of feeling, many persons of excitable temperament would gather to this new standard of profession. In the early Bristol Minutes, mention is made of two crazy persons, in particular, by whom the meetings were disturbed from week to week. And a severe trial awaited the newly gathered Society in Bristol, in the visit paid by James Naylor, in company with a set of followers who, on any other supposition than that of their being insane, must be allowed to have rendered him blasphemous homage. I cannot bring myself to dwell on the painful details of their proceedings, and of the still more inexcusable cruelty with which James Naylor was treated. There may be lessons of instruction to be derived from these events, as regards the effects which spiritual pride and vanity may produce, and from the humility and contrition which marked Naylor's subsequent course; but there was still more in his case, if I mistake not, which pointed to a truth but little recognized in that day, that there are diseased conditions of mind which should rather be dealt with by the skill of the physician, than by the branding-iron of the executioner. But if any shade of excuse was to be found in such excesses for the indiscriminate persecution of this suffering people, it must be borne in mind that their suffering was everywhere received with meekness and resignation, such as should have disarmed prejudice and opposition.

In Somersetshire, as in Bristol, this period of the Commonwealth was one in which Friends suffered greatly from the violence of mobs gathered to assault them, and led on, as was too often the case, by parish priests, and instigated by the magistrates themselves. Companies of men, armed with pitchforks, and other weapons, rushed into quiet village meetings, causing the utmost disorder; and afterwards accused the Friends so assembled of having been concerned in a riot. In some instances the horses of Friends who were riding to meeting were taken from them; and those who ventured a few miles from their homes were apprehended on a charge of vagrancy. Among these is mentioned John Evans, of Inglishcombe, near Bath. His wife, Katherine Evans (a well-known name), having ventured to preach repentance to the people, in the market place, at Salisbury, was, by the Mayor's order, tied to a whipping-post in the market, and scourged by the beadle. Returning thither, next month, and exhorting the people as before, she was sent to the Bride well, and put into an offensive place called the blind-house where two madmen had lately died. It is mentioned that she had been confined, a little while before, in a cell with an insane woman. The magistrates proposing to renew the former punishment, one of their number, Colonel Wheat, zealously opposed it, and told the Mayor "they might as well have whipped the woman of Samaria, who brought good tidings into the town." The accounts given of Katherine Evans present us with a succession of cruel treatment, including imprisonments in Bristol, Ilchester, and elsewhere. It was she who, in company with Sarah Cheevers, a Wiltshire Friend being on a religious visit in the Mediterranean, was imprisoned in the Inquisition, in Malta, in 1659, where they endured great suffering, for three years and a-half The house of the Inquisition, in Malta, has now been rebuilt, and is used as a guard-house for soldiers. I paid a visit to it, during the winter of 1833–34, which I spent in that island, with George Waring; but could not identify any part of the premises with the account given in Sewell's history, excepting the well, in the central court of the building, to which the poor prisoners were allowed access on a few occasions. There is an epistle, from Sarah Cheevers, from the Inquisition in Malta, preserved amongst the papers in our Quarterly Meeting's chest, at Bridgwater—but not written, as I have heard it said, by means of a stick, dipped in soot and water. The writing is in the form of printed letters, and might have been executed with any pointed instrument, but the ink retains its orginal blackness. An additional cause of suffering to Friends resident in country places, was the severe treatment pursued towards them in the recovery of the ecclesiastical demands, which they refused. I select the following from among many such cases on record, as having occurred in Somersetshire, during the Commonwealth. As Henry Gundry, a husbandman, of Street, was driving his oxen, he was arrested at the suit of a tithe-farmer. The bailiffs beat and abused him, and hurried him away to Ilchester jail, without permitting him to speak to his wife or any of his friends. He continued a prisoner above fourteen months. William Sergeant, of Bathford, had suffered ten months' imprisonment for tithes, when the prosecutor entered another action against him and his wife, and in the time of harvest, when the industrious woman was taking eare of their eorn, arrested and sent her also to prison. They had two trusty servants, who diligently followed the harvest work; but they also were imprisoned; and, had it not been for the kind interest of some of their neighbors, the eorn would have been left unhoused. This would not, however, have mattered much to the poor man himself, for, after twenty months' imprisonment, he died in jail. Another imprisonment for tithes, which at this time terminated in death, was that of John Comb. At Wellington, a poor Journeyman was subpœnaed in the Exchequer for a demand of two pence halfpenny. The number of Friends imprisoned in England during the Commonwealth, is stated in Knight's Pictorial History of England, to have been 3,173, and of deaths in prison, 32.—Tanner's Lectures.

EXTRACT FROM MARIA FOX'S DIARY.

The unity of those who have judgment, and whose office it peculiarly is to extend help to the poor minister in whatever way they may see it to be needful, has always been very precious to me, and there have been seasons when the judicious, well-timed expression of it has been indescribably helpful to a mind peculiarly open to the assaults of unbelief and, at seasons, sorely buffeted of Satan. So that I cannot help earnestly desiring our dear friends in the station of elder may be found discharging the important trust committed to them, whether in the way of encouragement or counsel. The feeling may seem to themselves so small as to be scarcely worth the expression; but "a word spoken in due season, how good is it!" Their burden and exercise is of vast importance to the vital welfare of the body.

The ministry, as it is recognized among Friends, is so unshackled, such liberty is given for the exercise of the gift bestowed, so extensive the field that lies open to the gospel laborer, both within and without our own pale, and so varied the services to which such may be called, that it is peculiarly important all the means that can be employed for the help and instruction of these should be brought into exercise. Many young ministers (perhaps older ones also) do, I believe suffer greatly for want of timely counsel.

It is a subject I desire to touch with delicacy, and with a feeling sense of my own liability to err; but surely it is one of great moment to the well-being of our Society, seeing that, however excellent the gift or evident the anointing, human instruments are weak and fallible, have the treasure in earthen vessels, and are constantly liable to receive a bias from a variety of causes and circumstances. The constitution of our Society appears to me excellent, I had almost said perfect, in this matter. May it be acted upon and carried out with faithfulness, in simplicity and godly sincerity, and then fruit will be found to the praise and glory of Him who is the Head over all things to his church. It is an awful thing for ministers to set their own feelings above the care of their friends or the judgment of the church. These should remember that the various members of the body have not all the same office, but that the Lord hath tempered them together as it hath pleased him, so that "the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you" They are for the help and comfort of one another, that the functions of the whole may be healthfully performed; and whilst we must not in any degree diminish the importance of ministers looking with a single eye to their heavenly Leader and Guide, remembering the declaration of our Lord, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren," they must bear in mind that, whilst to one is committed the gift of prophecy or preaching, to another is given the discerning of spirits, and that it is the Lord's will that his people should be subject one to another, that all may learn and all may be comforted.

I sometimes think the ground of the different and even opposite errors into which some have fallen who have occupied conspicuous stations amongst us, both in this country and in America, whereby so much suffering has been brought upon the Society, may have been a departure from true humility. But where is humility to be looked for if not amongst those who are the professed followers of Jesus and who believe themselves called to a ministry which is pre-eminently the work of the Spirit? May this blessed fruit increase and abound among us!

The favors of fortune are like steep rocks; only eagles and creeping things mount to the summits.

SMOKING IN GERMANY.

In Germany if a boy is caught smoking he is locked up. The government has become anxious about the effects of tobacco on the physique of the soldiers of the future, and in order to rectify in some measure the evil, ordered the police to arrest all boys found smoking in the streets if they are under sixteen years old, and to have them punished by fine and imprisonment.

According to reports resulting from government investigation, a clearly defined line has been discovered between the smokers and the non-smokers who attend the polytechnic schools, those who do not smoke being decidedly superior in general scholarship and mental vigor. The poisonous nicotine, so far counteracted in the adult smoker by the resisting forces of his mature constitution, takes hold of the forming tissues of the young, and does its injurious work without hindrance.

We have recently presented this subject of the prohibition of boys smoking in Germany to a German, who writes in reply: in Germany the education of children is very different from what it is here in America. The children, almost without exception, look upon their parents with the highest respect. A word from them, a wish, is an order that must be obeyed. They are dependent upon their parents longer than most American boys; attend school from the sixth to the fourteenth year; and those parents who can afford it send their children to school for a much longer period. They are much more severely disciplined and punished by whipping on the slightest disobedience. The schools are managed differently from American schools. A German boy does not dare to smoke. He knows that if he does, and is caught at it, he will be punished. I am sorry to say, however, that nearly every German man smokes.

It might be suggested to our German friends that prohibition, extending to the later years of life, would be more effectual. It stops too soon, before boys' habits for life are formed. Prohibition during the earliest years of life seems to work well. Let it be tried longer.—Dr. M. L. Holbrook, in Nat. Tem. Adv.

A COPY OF GILES KNIGHT'S CERTIFICATE.

To our well beloved Friends and Brethren in the Truth at Nailsworth, in Gloucestershire or elsewhere, we send greeting:—

Signifying that our ancient friend, Giles Knight, having some occasion to see his native country, and his outward affairs requiring his personal appearance, doth induce him, as well as affection, to undertake his voyage to see his old friends; now he having made application to our Monthly Meeting in order to have a Certificate, and persons appointed to make enquiry how he leaves his family; and withal if the ship could not stay until our next Monthly Meeting he mought have a Certificate, signed by the Particular Meeting where he belongs, to wit Byberry.

These may certify that enquiry being made, and no objection found, we recommend him as an elder and one well esteemed by us for many years; having left his family with a great deal of love; he has had that great comfort in having sober and well inclined children, and the Lord has blest him with outward substance, which we hope may be well disposed to his hopeful offspring. We heartily wish the Lord may spare his life to see his friends and family again; having left us in unity and love. We wish and pray for his preservation in the Truth; with all the faithful throughout the whole world: We salute you and bid you farewell in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Signed at Byberry the 8th of 7th mo., 1717, by order of Abington Monthly Meeting.

"A Still Tongue," etc.—Give not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is like the sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue.—Quarles.

CHINESE BUSINESS HONOR.

The Chinese are remarkable for their business talent. So sharp and clever are they, that some one has named them "The Yankees of the East." In one respect they excel not only the Yankees, but all the people of the United States. They carry on their government on business principles, just as we manage a cotton factory or railroad. Two thousand years ago they formed their civil service on the basis that "merit only, established by public examinations, gives the right to every public office." England, imitating the Chinese, some fifteen years ago elevated her civil service to a similar plane. The United States, however, is still in the slough, from which the Chinese extricated themselves long before our ancestors wore decent clothing. Another custom of this peculiar people is worthy of the imitation of the "outside barbarians." It is said that before New Year's day—which occurs on the 26th of January—every Chinaman who values his reputation pays all his debts. What value a Chinese merchant puts on his reputation may be learned from a suggestive story. During the troubles that preceded the war with England, the Chinese viceroy, Ye, issued an edict condemning to death every native convicted of holding the slightest intercourse with the "barbarians." The English, French, and other European merchants were thus forced to close their counting-houses in Canton; for the native clerks and porters left their employ, and no Chinese merchant dared openly to transact business with them. Besides, they feared for their lives, and many of them made preparations to leave the city. Among these was a Swiss merchant. While he was packing up his goods one night, he was surprised to see a Chinese merchant who owed him a large sum, enter his store. With him were two coolies, carrying ingots of silver with which to pay the debt. The Swiss merchant expressed his astonishment at the temerity of the Chinese debtor. "I do not wish," replied the Chinaman, "that any one should think I would take advantage of these unfortunate circumstances and not pay my debts." Youth's Companion.

"FOR BEHOLD THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS WITHIN YOU."

Pilgrim to the heavenly city,
Groping wildered on thy way;
Look not to the outward landmark,
List not what the blind guides say.

For long years thou hast been seeking,
Some new idol found each day;
All that dazzled, all that glittered,
Lured thee from thy path away.

On the outward world relying,
Earthly treasures thou wouldst heap;
Titled friends and lofty honors,
Lull thy higher hopes to sleep.

Thou art stored with worldly wisdom,
All the lore of books is thine;
And within thy stately mansion,
Brightly sparkles wit and wine.

Richly droop the silken curtains,
Round those high and mirrored halls:
And on mossy Persian carpets
Silently thy proud step falls.

Not the gentlest wind of heaven,
Dared too roughly fan thy brow;
Nor the morning's blessed sunbeam,
Tinge thy cheek with ruddy glow.

Yet midst all these outward riches,
Hast thy heart no void confessed;
Whispering, though each wish be granted,
Still, oh still I am not blessed?

And when happy, careless children,
Lured thee with their winning ways;
Thou hast sighed in vain contrition,
Give me back those golden days.

Hadst thou stooped to learn their lesson,
Truthful preachers—they had told;
Thou thy kingdom hast forsaken,
Thou hast thy own birthright sold.

Thou art heir to vast possessions,
Up, and boldly claim thine own;
Seize the crown—that waits thy wearing,
Leap at once into thy throne.

Look not to some cloudy mansion,
'Mong the planets far away?
Trust not to the distant future,
Let thy heaven begin to day.

When thy struggling soul hath conquered,
When the path lies fair and clear;
When thou art prepared for Heaven,
Thou wilt find that Heaven is here.

LOQUACITY.

"The words of the wise are sometimes spoken so quietly that they are not heard at all beyond the ear in which they are spoken, and yet they get abroad into the common air, and modify the thoughts and feelings of men. Wisdom is a sort of calm, penetrating, roundabout judgment of times, events, men, and things. It is no conceit of knowledge, but such an appreciation of things as discharges the mind of all conceit, and brings in humility at the sense of how little it knows. Then, too, as men grow wise, they grow silent, and sparing of their words. I do not remember of ever having seen a garrulous man who was a wise man. I suppose that it was in view of this fact, that wisdom is inclined to be a little reticent, that Mr. Carlyle, in one of his pungent paragraphs, so satirizes the passion for rhetoric, talking, speech-making, and praises silence and work. Of all business, talking, declaiming, popular address is most trying to integrity of feeling, clear convictions, and thorough inward honesty. It was this profession of loquacity that Augustine so bitterly repented of, in his years of wisdom, when the excellence of truth and simplicity had dawned on him. History records that a sure indication of the decline of the Roman Empire was that the profession of public speaker had become so popular, and the grave old taciturn Roman had got to drivelling words in weak loquacity."—H. Stebbins.

Say not all that thou knowest, but know always what thou sayest.

To do that which before us lies in daily life, is the prime wisdom.

NOT REMEMBERED, YET NOT LOST.

Bishop Hoskyns thus encourages those, who though earnest in their desires to be benefited, find it difficult to retain in their memory what they hear or read:

"I have heard of one who, returning from an affecting sermon, highly commended it to some; and being demanded what he remembered of it, answered: 'Truly, I remember nothing at all; but only while I heard it, it made me resolve to live better; and so, by God's grace, I will.'"

There is a story to the same purpose of one, who complaining to a holy aged man, that he was discouraged from reading the Scriptures, because he could fasten nothing upon his memory. The old hermit bade him take an earthen pitcher and fill it with water. He then bade him empty it again and wipe it clean, that nothing should remain in it. This being done, "Now," said he, "though there be nothing of the water remaining in it, yet the pitcher is cleaner than it was before; so though thy memory retain nothing of the word thou readest, yet thy heart is cleaner for its very passage through."

To the above may be added the following, of later date:

"What a sermon we had last Sunday!" said a poor woman, who kept a small shop, to a neighbor.

"What was it about?" asked her friend.

"I don't remember," she replied.

"What was the text?" she then asked.

"I cannot quite think," was the reply; "but I know that when I got home, I took and burnt up my bad bushel."

We want more of these sermons that make people burn up their bad bushels, and destroy their rascally weights and measures; and a memory that saves enough of the sermon to revolutionize and reform the life, will serve an excellent purpose, even if it does not retain all the gracious words that reach the ear.—Selected.

MEDDLE not with things that do not concern thee, but do thine own business diligently.

FLATTER no one, and let no one flatter thee.

If a man going into business says, "I am too busy for prayer or for meditation," nothing can save him; but if he says, "Because I am going down into the battle-field I must put on my armor;" if every morning he lifts up his heart to the hills from whence cometh his help; if every evening he abides, as it were, in the love of the truth; if he says, 'Because I am burdened and oppressed, all the more need is there that I should take care of the temple of the soul," then this peril will be avoided. None so much as very active business men need to be in relation to the invisible and the eternal.

What to shut eyes has God revealed?
What hear the ears that death has sealed?
What undreamed beauty passing show
Requites the loss of all we know?

O silent land, to which we move,
Enough if there alone be love;
And mortal need can ne'er outgrow
What it is waiting to bestow!—Whittier.

The higher experiences of the soul are always clouded by predominant experiences of the lower appetites or passions. If a man will overeat and overdrink, all his religious experiences will be spurious, by the law of the body and by the law of the mind. You cannot violate these fundamental laws and not suffer accordingly.

Knowledge dwells
In heads replete with thoughts of other men.
Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much,
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.—Cowper.
